Sitting at the table of the caffè Pedrocchi, she is waiting for her friends, they are late. Compulsively she fixes her makeup, her hairdo and checks the clock on the wall as she anxiously waits for her friends to arrive. Her smiles are childish and excited as those of a little girl waiting for a surprise.

The photograph proposes here a reflection on the definition of identity with respect to others. When we define ourselves by belonging, we find the security that allows us to inhabit the spaces that society makes available to us. Nevertheless, we are constantly searching for approval and confrontation, in the perennial hope of finding in the other a defect that makes us feel more in line with the idea of perfection that we would like to embody.
